

Building Classroom Community and Citizenship on Constitution Day

Wednesday, September 16, 2020

September 17, 1787, marks the date on which the delegates to the Constitutional Convention signed the United States Constitution. Constitution Day and Citizenship Day.

A constitution, at its core, is a social contract that defines a system of rules and expectations that we all live by. Similarly, classroom rules are put in place to create order and rules to make learning equal for all. When the Framers of the Constitution gathered to write it, they had to work together despite their differences in order to unify the new nation.

Today is a good day to reflect upon how you and your classmates can work together daily and help hold one another accountable for following classroom rules and being good citizens both inside & outside of school.
